Art Brushes Art Brushes allow you to draw and paint objects in an image using any type of drawing and painting tools. They come in a variety of shapes, sizes, and colors, allowing you to create your own brushes or select from a wide variety of brushes already built in the program. Your brushes appear in the Brushes palette after you have selected them from the Art Brush panel or used the Brush tool in the toolbox. When you're using the Brush tool, it displays the Art Brush palette in the default color palette. (You can change the tool's palette color at any time.) Art Brushes are different from the built-in Photoshop brushes that come with the program. The built-in brushes use the exact shape of the tool icon, which you see in many places in the Toolbox, but they do not follow the exact color and shape of the brush itself. You can create your own Art Brushes, then select them from the Art Brush palette.

Health care seeking behavior of women living with HIV/AIDS in India: a qualitative study. The purpose of the study was to study the health care seeking behavior of women living with HIV/AIDS in India. This qualitative study used grounded theory approach for the data collection and data analysis. Seventeen women were interviewed using an exploratory and descriptive approach of grounded theory. The findings revealed that the women accessed care mainly from home-based providers, from friends and family members who were living with HIV, and a general practitioner. The use of multiple sources of care was related to the lack of awareness of the disease, the stigma, and the fear of transmission. The study highlights the importance of raising awareness among women living with HIV/AIDS regarding the availability of care and provision of services. Exosomes released by mesenchymal stem cells attenuate lung disease in irradiated rats by delivering TGF- β 1 and PD-L1 to Langerhans cells. Irradiated patients with cancer are at a high risk of developing radiation-induced lung diseases (RILD) which is typically worsened by primary treatment. Mesenchymal stem cells (MSCs) have been shown to exert therapeutic effects in various murine RILD models and also in a clinical trial in patients with RILD. However, the mechanism of action of MSCs remains unknown. By using cytokine arrays, we found that MSCs released exosomes that contained transforming growth factor (TGF)- β 1 and programmed death ligand (PD-L1) and that TGF- β 1-rich exosomes had a strong effect on immunosuppression. To validate the importance of these molecules in MSC-mediated immunosuppression, we transplanted MSC-derived exosomes with immunosuppression in irradiated rats and confirmed that the expression of both TGF- β 1 and PD-L1 on Langerhans cells (LCs) increased after MSC-exosomes treatment. Furthermore, we confirmed that exosomes with TGF- β 1 and PD-L1 induced LCs apoptosis in vitro. Importantly, the attenuation of RILD was observed in the transplanted group compared to that in the control group. Our data suggest that MSC-derived exosomes attenuate lung disease by delivering TGF- β 1 and PD-L1 to LCs.
